

Building a High Performing Team

The Twenty-first Century will see the way we do our work continually evolve. There will be a need to fully utilize human potential through collaboration. This means that all workers, especially non-supervisory, will need to have good interpersonal skills and the ability to interact with others through a working understanding of human behavior. There will be a new emphasis on working together in effective, efficient and positive ways.

This course will help participants learn to build their own skills in working with and leading high performance teams. It will also help them learn to teach their teams to understand team process and how to work together to create truly outstanding teams.

If you are tired of poor teamwork, low productivity, progress-stopping conflict or any of the typical team breakdowns, then this is a course for you. Both you and your team will benefit.

Objectives of the Module

Class 1: To understand what team building is and how to begin a new team.

Class 2: To understand the role of group process and how to overcome resistance to team building.

Class 3: To learn to build community in a team.

Class 4: To learn to evaluate team progress and how to achieve continuous team improvement.

Discover how leading a team can be a powerful model for managing and growing as a leader. Register today!